Description: Birds of prey are hunters, keen sighted, sharp-eared, swift in flight and deadly in attack. They are feared by many creatures. some of which spend their lives with one eye cocked to the sky. Venturing into the open as little as possible, and always ready to run for cover. Others equally alert and agile, are able to fight back with teeth or sharp beaks, claws or talons, venom and stings. In spite of this birds of prey seem to be able to find and kill food almost without effort and many have become so cunning and so strong that they can overpower animals far bigger than themselves.

Description: Book has been rebound. ex lib with the usual stamps and markings. In determining the colour breeding capacity of a budgerigar, the visible and invisible colour qualities or factors are the only things which count, and as far as is known at present, the pedigree of a bird is only of academic interest and may even be misleading . Thus the bird which is described in the tables as green/ white, whether it is produced from the mating, light green, white, blue, or any other mating, is exactly the same bird. It will not produce for instance, greywings because one of its parents had the greywing factor. With explanatory notes and index.

The goat compared with all other domestic animals produces the greatest quantity of human food in relation to her own body weight. This may come as a surprise to some people used to hearing of the records of the egg-a-day duck and the 1,000galln cow. It is not at all unusual for a goat weighing little more than 100ib, to produce more than 10ib, (approximately one gallon) of milk in a day , thus providing her owner with her own body weight in good rich, easily digested food each ten days. Further more, she will continue to give this milk week in and week out, sometimes for years, without a dry day.

Description: Boards are stained. General wear to book. How do birds steer on these colossal journeys, many of them over oceans much larger than the North sea? Can they see the loom of the land four or five hundred miles away? Even if they could this would not account for the North American Golden Plover, who flies non stop from Canada to British Guiana, two thousand miles across a landless ocean. We know they do it, but how? Who is it tells the young birds where to go when they leave the nesting grounds on the Artic Tundra and go South in hundreds with never an old bird to direct them ? For the old ones are worn out with the nesting and are moulting as well and not in condition to make the journey with the young birds.

Description: The great wood of Caledon was a huge native forest which extended across most of Northern Scotland. Once the haunt of wolves, lynx, Wild boars and brown bears, centuries of axe, fire and saw have reduced the forest to less than one per cent of its natural range. But even today the remnants are still the largest area of continuous old forests in Britain and one of the wildest regions in Western Europe. These wild woods still harbour many of the original species of birds and animals specially adapted to the habitat, some like the Scottish crossbill are found nowhere else in the world. Home also for wildcat, red deer, crested tit, osprey, golden eagle and many more. This is the story of life in the great wood its majesty, its near extinction and its future.

Description: Dust Jacket is dirty worn. Edge wear to boards. Previous owner has taped paper cutting to first fep. Pen markings to first fep. This is one of the most ambitious books on garden flora ever published. A team of expert photographers has worked continuously through three flowering seasons to amass over 4,000 colour photographs. From these 2,048 have been selected to illustrate the most comprehensive collection of known garden plants in colour. In 256 pages these superb colour plates are arranged in alphabetical order by botanical names within their horticultural categories. The categories include perennials, annuals and biennials, greenhouse and indoor plants and rock garden plants. Each illustration is accompanied by a caption giving its correct botanic name. Supporting these captions there are 120 pages of text in the form of a comprehensive A-Z guide. The guide is in botanical name order with full cross reference of Anglo American common names. It also includes many practical and useful details concerning the cultivation and characteristics of each plant.

Description: First few pages are slightly dirty and creased. The River Tamar is one of the great rivers of the world. An overstatement , no I dont think so, lets examine the facts, first of all there is the nameTamar, it certainly has a rather majestic air to it. Tamar seems naturally to lend itself to be categorised alongside the Thames, The Severn, and other great rivers, with majestic sounding names. So before looking any further we can establish that the Tamar is a great river by title at least. Hopefully as you read on, ill be able to convince you that the Tamar is not a great river by name only. On the face of it this is quite a challenge in itself.

Description: Slight bumping to spine. Looking at the earth today, its forests, fields, moors, scrublands, gardens. It seems almost impossible to imagine it without flowers, for in the world of land plants, there are more flowers than any other form. Yet the first plants to come up on land out of the sea, about 440 million years ago, did not even have leaves, and another 305 million years had to pass before the first true flowers began to appear. So considering that the earth itself is supposed to have existed for about 4500 million years, flowers are almost new arrivals on the scene only about 135 million years old. Now apart from being lovely to look at, with all the rainbow colours and of almost every imaginable shape, flowers are extremely important, because they are actually the mothers and fathers of plants. It is because of them that their plants can be carried on through the centuries, generation after generation.

Description: Fep are slightly dirty with small tear in back fep. ex school book. Every morning a record of the night activities of the animal world is to be found printed all over the countryside in sand, mud, or snow. The tracks and traces are of immense variety and the stories they tell are interpreted in this book with the help of Professor Tinbergens remarkable photographs and Dr, Annions lively drawings. This is a book for anyone interested in wild life. It teaches an awareness of small signs that can be easily overlooked. It shows how to identify animals, including birds, from their tracks, how to tell which animals was first on the scene, and whether they were stalking or playing, moving fast or slowly, and how to interpret from the tracks that remain, many dramas of animal life that we would otherwise not know of. Most of the photographs were taken in England, but the animals included can be found all over Northern Europe and closely related species in North America. Both the Authors are well known naturalists, and have published several books.

Publisher: Mitchell Beazley

Edition:

Book Size: 290mm x 230mm

Pages: 272

Volumes: 1

Condition: Fair

Jacket Condition:

Binding: Soft Cover

Description: This book offers the reader a fresh look at what birds are, what makes them tick, and what lies behind their extraordinary success in coming to terms with virtually every habitat available on our planet. From the polar regions to the equatorial rain forests and from the mountain tops to the sky and the open sea. Visiting the natural habitats of many of the worlds most fascinating birds requires more time and wherewithal than most of us can command. Not every one can travel to New Zealand to see a Kiwi or to Australia to observe an Emu. We may aspire to know at least our own native species, and through the displays of captive birds in our zoos and wildlife parks, a few species from other lands.
