Of all the Stuarts she had the most affectionate nature. Yet she was too often denied the outlet for her warmth of heart. Her mother died almost before she knew her, her father made an unpopular second marriage to an Italian princess whom Anne could not like. Annes seventeen pregnancies produced only one child who lived more than a few months, and he was deformed and had to be hidden from the public for most of his eleven years. Only with Sarah Jennings, the fascinating creature whom she had known since childhood and who was to make a brilliant marriage with John Churchill, was Anne able to establish the close, absorbing intimacy that she craved.
